

103.02 GENERAL CRITERIA

Every effort should be made in the treatment of structures to respect the Islamic design and culture.

Design concepts should be easily implemented. Construction considerations are also taken into account in the architectural treatment concepts. Architectural elements should be functional, durable and easily maintained.

Each structure should have individuality; however, a totally different design is not required for each structure. It is desirable to maintain a sense of continuity throughout the whole program.

Architectural treatment should be continuous through an interchange.

In the downtown area, underpasses spanning a given roadway should have similar treatment to establish continuity. Decorative and median lighting should be similar on overpasses along a given route.
