

1.6 Lighting and Architectural Integration

All elements of a lighting installation contribute to the architecture or the exterior design of a space, area, street and/or facility. Understanding the use of space will be important when deciding what sort of lighting is to be employed. The dimensions, finishes, texture and colour of the materials forming the space and the appearance of the luminaires, lit and unlit, should be considered if the desired atmosphere is to be achieved.

Figures 141, 142
Lighting as integrated element of architecture and space.